But why is the modern consumer in Casino so afraid of the abbreviation GMO itself? Products wholesale and retail. Let's figure out what exactly threatens the consumption of such products.

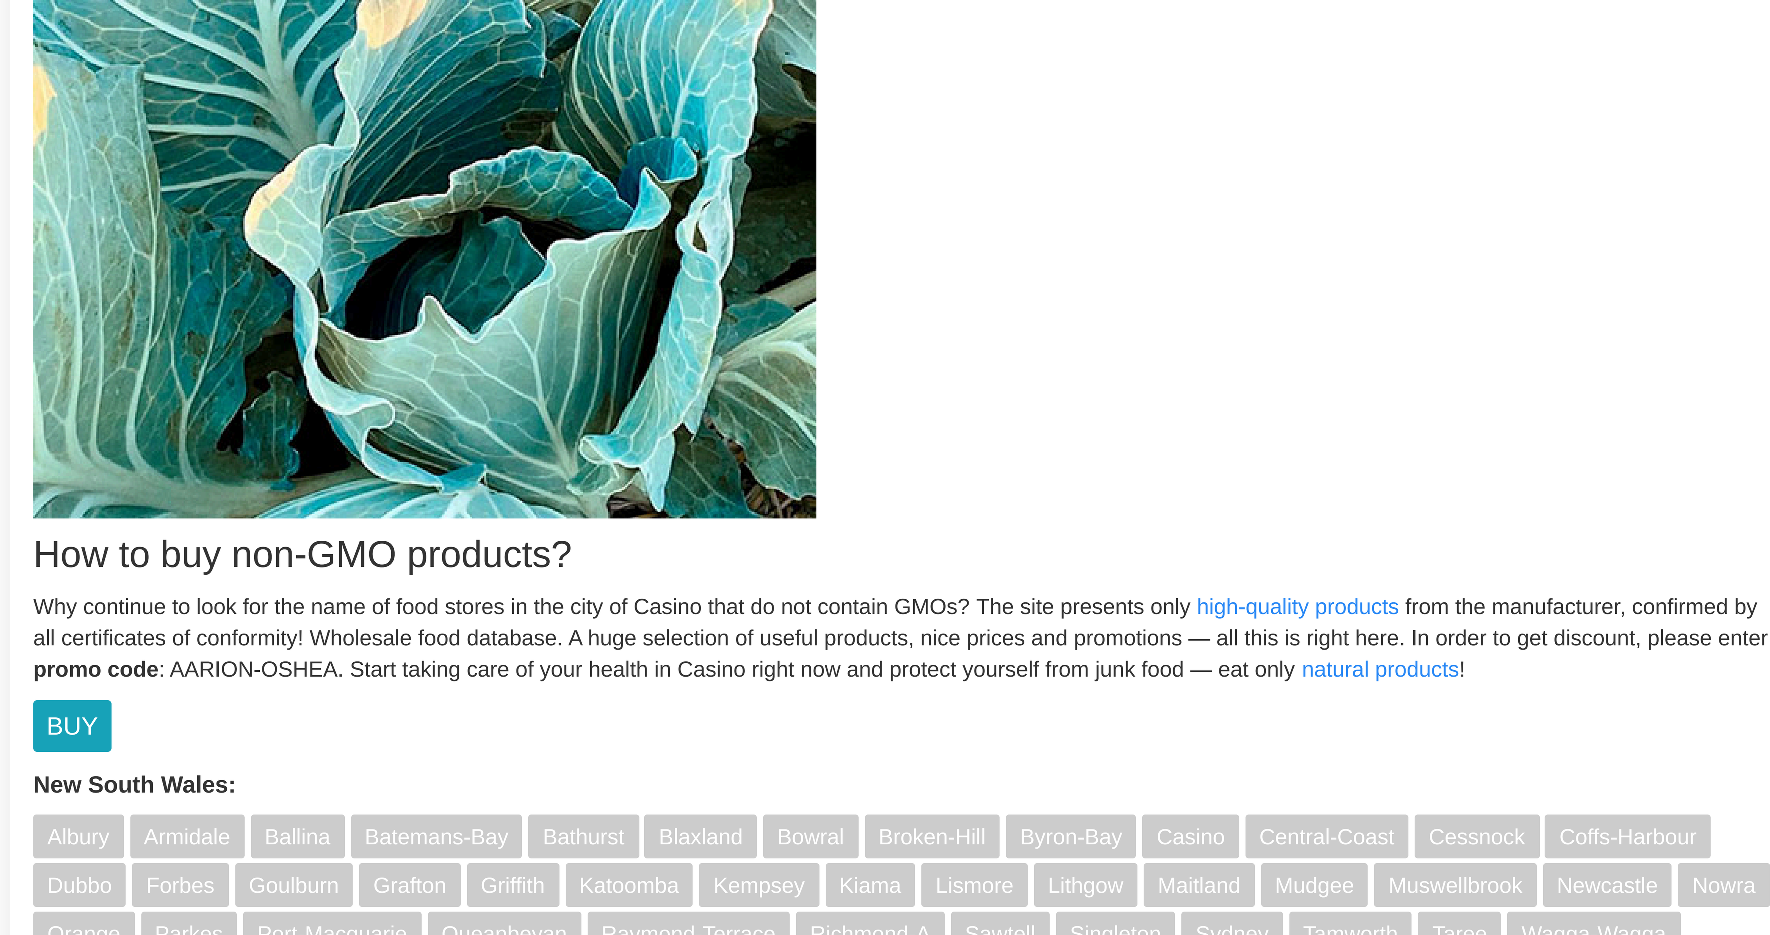

GMO: what is it?

Genetically modified organisms (GMOs) — products obtained by using genetic engineering techniques. Small wholesale food. Simply put, a certain fragment of DNA from any other organism is introduced into the genome of plant or animal material to give the first certain properties that improve its qualities. For example, scientists have learned to "transplant" the Arctic flounder gene to strawberries so that they become frost-resistant. Gene technology has its supporters and ardent opponents. Scientists claim that such a scientific approach can significantly improve the quality of food products, and in the future — will completely solve the problem of hunger on the planet. Cabbage dried to buy. Well, ordinary consumers in the city of Casino are simply afraid of a hidden threat, since the products obtained can carry a great danger to the body.

It is not surprising that consumers in Casino today began to study more closely the products presented on store shelves. Today, preference is increasingly given to those products whose packaging says "Does not contain GMOs". And scientists themselves identify a number of dangers that genetically modified products contain: the possibility of allergic reactions and poisoning. The development of the body's resistance to antibiotics, which literally nullifies almost any treatment using such drugs. Wholesale products for store. Accumulation of herbicides in the body, which can lead to deterioration of human health. The main problem is that almost the entire list of GMOs introduced into food today has not passed serious scientific tests. And no scientist can say with 100% certainty that such products are completely safe for consumption.

It is absolutely impossible for a simple buyer in the city of Casino to determine which products are non-GMO, since manufacturers, even if they use this practice, do not indicate it on packages, so as not to frighten consumers. We can only highlight the list of products where such substances are most common: Dairy products (cottage cheese, yogurt, milk). Selling bow wholesale. Snacks (corn flakes, chips). Vegetables and fruits (tomatoes, cucumbers, apples, pears). Vegetable crops (soybeans, corn, wheat, rice). It turns out that literally in any product there can be a "transplanted" DNA gene.
